MAN SENTENCED IN '97 COLD CASE

A man convicted in a brutal 1997 attempted murder, kidnapping and sexual assault of a teenage girl has been sentenced to the maximum possible sentence today.

Ray Ojeda (04-09-71) was found guilty of attempted first-degree murder (F2), second-degree kidnapping (F2) and first-degree sexual assault (F2) earlier this year. Today he was sentenced to 144 years prison - 48 years on each count run consecutively.

On June 14, 1997, a 15-year-old girl was walking home near Federal Boulevard and Holden Place when Ojeda kidnapped her at gunpoint and took her to a secluded area near the South Platte River at 64th Avenue and York Street. Ojeda sexually assaulted her, then shot her in the head and threw her in the river. She was able to walk a half-mile to I-270 and flag down a passerby for help.

The case remained unsolved. Then in 2011, Ojeda was convicted of a felony marijuana charge in Texas, and his DNA was submitted to the CODIS database. His DNA came back as a match to the DNA taken from the victim in the original sex assault examination. The match not only led to the arrest and conviction of Ojeda, but also exonerated two men who had been identified earlier as possible suspects in the case.

The conviction and sentencing is the result of work by Denver's Cold Case Project and prosecutors Chief Deputy DA Dawn Weber and Deputy DA Kelly Waidler.
